

AGRICULTURAL.

A Barn-Yard Lyric. That man's spouse is rich and sure, Who thus piles up his home manure; I know what help the farmers get From a mere spoonful of poultice.

I know what odd, mysterious shapes From superphosphates, down to Mapes, The modern helps to farming take, And keep myself to all awake.

I know the chemist will propound A sack of bones which finely ground, As good on land when rich or poor, As a full wagon of manure.

They may be right, they may be wrong; My faith will still continue strong, That he whose ardor ne'er abates, And his own garden cultivates,

With muck, sods and stalks and straw, And dripping heaps from thriving kine, Will to his hungry fallows draw All that the chemists can combine.

HOW I PLOW. Suppose the field to be fifty by thirty rods—and plow land should never be in smaller than two acre fields—I plow it by commencing in the middle with a furrow eighteen rods long and parallel to the longest sides, the ends of the furrow being at equal distances from the shortest sides. Then back furrow or turn around to the right making the first two furrows two inches shallower than the others, to avoid a ridge. After four furrows, plow across the ends, and the work is laid out. If the land is uneven or the soil not uniform, some care is necessary to keep the furrows straight and bring the work out alike on all sides.
